

Palermo trans•making week

24th February-28th February 2020

The trans-making project aims to establish a multilateral network of research and innovation staff active in the fields of placemaking/place-based art activities as a space to create alternative narratives for societal and economic renewal.

It investigates and experiments with placemaking to contribute actively to the democratization/well-being of society, educating and empowering individuals and disadvantaged minorities through research and production in the connection between art and new technologies.

Wayfarer citizens

Rethinking the categories of migration

The Law Department of the University of Palermo (Di.Gi.) has won a national competition launched by the Italian Ministry for Education, University and Research (MIUR) aimed at identifying a number of “Excellent Departments” in Italy. Consequently, the Di.Gi. has produced a five-year programme that includes the introduction of a postgraduate degree in “Migration, Rights, Integration”. The conference here presented will be the inaugural event of the new course of study.

We are inviting some of the leading experts in various disciplines in order to challenge the current categories usually applied to the phenomena, perception and governance of migration. Failure of the prevailing approach to effectively tackle the main issues of migration leads to the need for a revised course of action in this sector. Mobility has always been a common treat in human history, but the right to the freedom of movement is unfairly enjoyed by individuals in different parts of the world. Furthermore, the current legal and political framework on international mobility and citizenship poses a serious threat to the fundamental rights of the individuals.

“Wayfarer citizens” aims to bring together mental and creative energies to develop a new geopolitical and legal paradigm for human mobility based on the dignity of human beings.

Conducted by Clelia Bartoli, Law Department, University of Palermo & Lorenzo Marsili, European Alternatives

The goal is to shape a heresy of the nation State: a diasporic political community organized as a State without territory.

A land fragmented by boundaries and a humanity divided into rigid national identities represents a powerful detonator of wars and discrimination. In particular, nation states deal with human mobility as an exceptional condition that must be overseen and contained, putting the defense of borders before lives protection. To rethink the current geopolitical paradigm, a laboratory based on the "Otherwise method" will be proposed. That is a cooperative process that combines the cognitive approach with the creative one in order to widen the space between what exists and what is possible.
